Fund Manager's Comment

The Fund returned 5.44% in Q4 2024 from the 5.34% it printed in Q3 2024. We saw more of demand for dollar denominated asset amid depreciation of the local currency. Hence, we positioned more in fixed deposit to technically stay on the side lines as yields on securities have declined significantly. On the macro level, we expect FX stability amid the introduction of the Electronic Foreign Exchange Matching System (EFEMS); also, the CBN is expected to have better fire power to defend the local currency as the External Reserves grows and the country moves toward halting importation of fuel. Meanwhile, should there be need to purchase bonds, we will play at the shortest end of the yield curve to mitigate interest rate risk.

Strategy.

We intend to position more in fixed deposit to technically stay on the side lines as yields on securities have declined significantly. We would carefully consider the option of yields on short-term Eurobond to hedge against interest rate risk should there be a compelling need to invest in securities due to asset allocation constraint.
